Abstract

Logistics has recently received much attention in both practical and academic fields. So far, many logistics issues have been raised and studied in academia. However, there should be many various and important real-world logistics problems that are not fully researched or that even remain unexplored. Therefore, this presentation seeks, through my sharing of some of the main logistics works in which I have or am currently engaging, to not only inspire researchers to participate in the research on logistics management, but also to help them bring forth new and interesting logistics research topics. The research works to be introduced include global logistics, distribution logistics, facility location, city logistics, hazmat logistics, natural disaster logistics, perishable products logistics, and so on.
